JANESVILLE TROOPS BECOME PROFICIENT

LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT FRIS TELLS OF LIFE AND ACTIVITIES AT CAMP DOUGLAS.

MEN ARE SATISFIED

General King Praises Work of the Janesville Recruits and Notes Their Rapid Progress.

From the Second Separate Company of the 101st Cavalary, National Guard, comes a letter telling of the daily life of the boys who are on their first assignment. The company, recruited in Janesville, left for Camp Douglas last Monday.

Lieut. Henry Fris writes the following account of the camp life:

Your account in the issue of August 21 is exactly what occurred up to six o'clock in the evening. Our company supplied the officer of the day, and mounted guard on the evening of the day, commonly referred to as the O. D.

Capt. Jacke and his officers were complimented on their work, and the company was the most efficient at dress parade on the evening of the 23rd. This is considered a great honor, and our men have shown that they are above the average in all ways. They are constantly on alert and behave at all times as officers and gentlemen.

I am sure that when we return to Janesville at the end of the month that our city will be just as proud of its militia company. I can assure you that they will be deserving of any honor that can be shown them at that time.

The health of the men in general has been very good. We have one man in the hospital on a minor complaint, but he expects to be up and about in a day or so. About four men report at sick call every morning, but they usually require only slight treatment to put them in good shape again.

We eat very good food here, and our cooks have surely shown themselves to be capable. Officers and men alike have all expressed great satisfaction with the meals served. Our menu for yesterday, for example, was as follows: Breakfast—bacon, fried potatoes, soft bread, butter and coffee; dinner—roast beef, potatoes, bread, jelly and coffee; supper—hash, bread and butter and coffee.

Enlisted men are allowed to leave the grounds from seven to ten every evening without passes, but before or after these hours a pass is required to get out of camp. All men found roaming around our hours are put in the guard house. So far the Janesville company has not been in the guard house for any reason, which is a credit to them in fact they are models of good behavior.

Capt. Jacke and Lieut. Roy Worthington are at the present time drilling the men in the Manual of Arms. They must as they look splendid and are adapting themselves to the drill very rapidly. General King last night again praised the recruits on their soldierly appearance and general conduct, saying that great credit was due the officers who had accomplished so much in the short time at their disposal. The recruits, however, who have done such good work were rewarded yesterday by receiving permanent appointments.

Our garrison cook, is the only one of the company besides keeping the men contented with well cooked food, served to the "King's" taste, he has a knack of keeping them good-natured and many witticisms and his sunny smile.

A second letter from Lieut. Fris sent the next day gives a further account of the work of the recruits. After reporting for duty at 1:45 P. M. as many of the men as could be supplied with arms were taken to the parade grounds and given the manual of arms. The rest of the men were formed in squads and assigned to the newly appointed Corporals who took them to another part of the grounds, and under the observation of the Captain his Lieutenants instructed them in the "School of the Squad." In this the "non-coms" were being accustomed to giving orders and general becoming proficient in their duties. The detachment under arms was drilled for an hour, then changed places with those practicing the squad movements.

Capt. Jacke expressed himself as being very well pleased with the drilling done by the men. As soon as all our men can be supplied with the drilled company at the camp. Our men show very marked adaptability in military matters and have a way of doing their various duties that is most pleasing to the officers.

Our company will again mount guard on the 25th. Lieut. Worthington will be the officer of the day.

Officers and men join in sending best wishes to all at home.

Yours sincerely,

H. M. FRIS

PACIFIST TO SPEAK

AT SUNDAY MEETING

The Rev. Lloyd Jones, Formerly of Janesville, Will Be the Feature of Clear Lake Conference.

Tomorrow afternoon at the Clear Lake conference, near Milton, there will be afforded the citizens of Janesville and the neighboring country a most excellent opportunity to hear the Rev. Jenkins Lloyd Jones of Chicago talk on a subject with which he is so familiar that any other person, with the exception perhaps of David Starr Jordan of California. Dr. Lloyd Jones will make a plea for universal peace.

For some time the renowned Unitarian pastor has interested himself vigorously in the pacifist movement, and last winter he was one of the leading forces with Henry Ford when the latter conducted that memorable peace trip through Europe. Dr. Jones' talk is based largely on observations made on this trip, but of course he will cover a much broader range than a mere narrative of the trip. His lecture will conclude the program, and will be a summary of the different points brought forth in the other talks. The attempt to connect all the larger ethical movements with the larger ethical movements of the world is a task of no small dimensions, and Dr. Jones is a profound student of human nature, having studied the characteristics of man not only from the point of view of a minister, but also as a spiritual advisor, but also as a man of the world and as the head of a large family.

The Clear Lake conference is non-sectarian. The officers are desirous of having a large attendance. Picnic spots are plentiful. The Lincoln Center, Clear Lake, where the conference is to be held, is a beautiful spot, and the program will start at two o'clock, but it is hoped that many will come early and bring their lunches.

TEACHERS RESIGN; FORMER COACH BACK

Miss Mount and Mr. Greenstein to Leave Force of Janesville High School.

Two teachers of last year's high school force have resigned their positions to accept places elsewhere. Miss Grace Mount, who has been teaching English for the past ten years, tendered her resignation a few days ago. Mr. Greenstein of the commercial department will also leave the high school.

As yet no one to fill the vacancy caused by Miss Mount's departure has been procured by the school board, but Superintendent Faust expects to announce the name of the new teacher in a few days. Guy Curtis will take Mr. Greenstein's place. Mr. Curtis taught here for three years, but at the end of the year in June, 1915, he resigned to further pursue his studies at the University of Wisconsin. While here Mr. Curtis distinguished himself and the Janesville high school by turning out several championship teams in football and basketball.

The two departing teachers have many friends here who all join in wishing them success in their new positions. Mr. Faust announces that there will be a general teachers' meeting at three o'clock on the afternoon of September 1st, at the high school. Also that Principal Shearer will be in his office next Thursday, Friday and Saturday for consultation with pupils who wish to alter their courses for the coming semester's work.

All of the schools have been given a thorough cleaning and renovation; the grounds have been put in readiness, and everything is prepared for the opening of school on the fifth of September.

REGISTRATION DAY IS NEXT TUESDAY

Unless Voter Registers on This Occasion He Must Be Sworn In to Vote at Primaries.

Registration day for the primaries of September is next Tuesday, Aug. 29. Locally the five ward polls will be open for voters to register from 8 a. m. to 8 p. m. The next registration will be on the day of the primaries, Sept. 5, and then at the final election, Oct. 31, a third will be made. Near as City Clerk J. P. Hammarlund can tell the costs of the registration Tuesday, the total to be stood for by the city will be in excess of fifty-three dollars. Three inspectors in each poll in the five wards at three dollars is forty-five dollars, and eight dollars for advertising, incidental expense will raise the total several dollars.

Temperance Talks

By Temperance Educational League, ARIZONA EXECUTIVE, LAUDS PROHIBITION.

George W. Hunt, Governor of Arizona, in reply to letter from the San Diego Telegram, recently wrote that paper regarding prohibition in Arizona. It is similar to other reliable reports from states that have become dry territory. He confirms the contention so often made that abstinence from intoxicating liquor produces the well being of man and the development of a strong and healthy self sustaining people. He also speaks of the conservation movement that should command the interest and support of every loyal citizen. The letter follows:

"Dear Sir:

"In reply to your letter requesting a statement regarding the operation of the Prohibition law in Arizona, I may inform you that the effect of the measure is chiefly noticeable in the marked decrease of criminals in the State Prison and the State Hospital for the Insane.

"I am further authoritatively advised by the officials connected with the charity work that the number of needy families seeking public aid has perceptibly decreased since the adoption of Prohibition. It is not in my judgment discoverable that the abatement of retail liquor selling has had any appreciable adverse effect upon legitimate business.

"Very sincerely yours,

"GEO. W. HUNT,

"Governor of Arizona."

WHIRLWIND FINISH FOR CAMPAIGN IS NOW BEING PLANNED

Entire State Is to Be Honeycombed By Speakers in Every County and at Every Byway.

Seventy volunteer speakers during the last five days of the primary campaign will tour the state in the interest of the candidacy of Governor E. L. Phillip and other republican convention candidates. The aim will be to carry the message of the governor to every county and village in the state which he is not able to personally visit. The names and itinerary of the speakers will be announced later.

These speakers will not be professional politicians, but friends of the governor and other candidates who way his pledge to the people and who resent the misrepresentation which have been made regarding the administration.

Comparative tables of the state tax levy for each county, showing the Phillip and McGovern administration will be provided to bear out the contentions of the governor's supporters that expenditures have been curtailed.

Offers Are Accepted.

The republican ticket that nominated a ticket on June 7, realizing its duty and feeling toward the legislature, as well as candidates for the legislature, has, through the convention of the republican state central committee, accepted propositions from about seventy speakers throughout Wisconsin. "The speaker every campaign with autos through every county of the state during the last five days of the campaign," these men are not professional politicians, but citizens who are anxious to refute the false statements made in the press and other things relating to the present administration that are being circulated by the opposition.

The members of the convention besides the host are George Gordon and E. F. Lyons.

Plan Is New.

The plan is a new one and was not decided until Thursday, when the other members of the committee called on Mr. West to discuss the unusual number of offers to assist the republican campaign. About forty speakers were before the committee and many of the offers had been received. The offers were largely from friends of Gov. Phillip, Mr. Jeffris and other candidates.

Mr. West's plan will verify Gov. Phillip's statements on savings in administrative expenses," said Mr. West. "The figures in every case can be checked at the office of the county treasurer and will be brought home to the voters."

Campaign Is Exceptional.

"This will be an exceptional campaign," said many of the speakers, but each one will be inspired by a motive, not of selfishness, but of friendship and desire to assist the governor who they believe has made good, and the other candidates who, they think, will also make good.

Full details of the plans will probably be given out later. One of the aims will be to bring the tax payers the significant facts to the tables and place before him in black and white the indisputable results of Gov. Phillip's efficient and business-like administration.

OBITUARY.

Children's Serial Story

By Paul Holmes.

REAL DETECTIVES—AT LAST.

Salsburgh, Wis., Aug. 26, 1916.

I am a real detective. Harold is too, but not as real as I am. We were down to the police office today. We were in the court too. It was swell.

Don't you wish you were a detective? The Chief of Police whose name is Chief Campion is a nice man. He is going to give me a badge and a club too, if he can find one. And he'll see we will both be policemen when we grow up.

And, what do you think, in the paper tonight, I'll read it, has got our names in it and it will have our pictures when it gets the cuts made. I see we are both heroes, and all promising encores of the law of justice, honest and just that. Don't you wish you was me? I wouldn't change places with anybody now, not even with the Kaiser or the Robb. I'll tell you how it all happened.

Well, when I got home from your place, I had to work on the farm, laying the tile, but I played a trick on my dad so we didn't have to do any more. Then we didn't do any more at all. We played around and went swimming sometimes but the creek is so low it ain't no fun any more. The water is only two feet deep. When the fair came, we couldn't go, because we were both mad, and Harold thought we had better run away and go to some place where we could do what we wanted to and where we could swim. But we didn't dare. Then we thought about doing something. We were most school time, and we didn't want to go to school, but we didn't want to seem like it was most school time, so we thought that was the first time we thought that those men were bank robbers. But then we saw all, and we knew that now the robbers couldn't get away.

But when they saw that we had jumped out of the car and were coming right toward us. We were scared and started to run. And if we had a revolver we could stop them and get the reward. Harold said, and then we heard the police auto stop, and somebody yell, "Halt." One of the robbers had a gun in his hand, just like lightning, and there was a shot. Harold and I were so scared we fell down and lay there on the ground, all shaking.

And then both men ran just as fast as they could into our jump. One of them went into the tree first into the tree and lay there for five minutes without moving. The other one twisted his foot in the rope and broke his ankle. He can't stand up yet. The revolver was lying through the air and it hit beside me. I picked it up.

Wuz standing there with the gun when the police came up. I had it pointed at the robbers. Well, that is why we are real detectives. We told the policemen we had done everything on purpose. Harold even said he had got some glass to puncture their tire. The men were the bank robbers all right, and the police had found them at our place, and chased them, and they were getting away, when they stopped on account of that blowout. We really stopped them. At the police office, we said we would be big policemen some day, and I told you about that at the front of the letter, so I won't say it again. Maybe you will be a detective some day, too.

Winsor Jefferson Thorngate, DETECTIVE.

MARK INDIAN MOUND NEAR DEVIL'S LAKE

Huge Earthwork Creation of Redskins Will Be Suitably Located By Bronze Tablet.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE]

Madison, Wis., Aug. 26.—One of the largest prehistoric bird effigy mounds in the state will be marked by a bronze tablet on September 4 by the local members of the Wisconsin Archaeological society and the Sauk County Historical society. The mound is located near the hotel on the southeast shore of Devil's Lake. It measures 340 feet from the tip of one wing to the tip of the other, and its great body has a length of 115 feet. It differs from most other bird-shaped earthworks in having a forked tail and wings which are bent at a short distance from the tip. The discovery of the mound was made a number of years ago by William H. Crane, a pioneer Sauk county surveyor. He made a drawing of it in 1875, sent it to Increase Lapham, and the subject was then called to public attention.

Because of the many people who now come to the park inquiring the location of the mound, N. K. Cole of Baraboo gave money for the purchase of a suitable bronze marker. Miss Izora Virginia English will unveil the marker and the principal address will be made by William Dawson, Charles J. Brown of the historical society, says there will be delegations present from Milwaukee, Oconomowoc, Janesville, Watertown, Cottage, Kilbourn City, Fox Lake, Beaver Dam and Richland Center.

Miss Gladys Pierce went to Janesville Friday where she is the guest of Miss Bonita Olsen.

Frank Jenks of Madison, was a Brodhead visitor Friday.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT.

When my dog looks at yer friendly over melting pretty eyes, An' he wags his tail an' tries ter lick yer hand, yer heart is glad. Then I don't care wot yer look like an' I don't care wot yer been. Yer good enough fer me—yer under-stand?

Sometimes a human bein' judges by yer fancy coat, An' if yer gloves an' shoes is new an' whole; But a dog, when he looks at yer, doesn't notice little things; A dog—a dog he judges by yer soul!

When my dog looks at yer friendly, like he wants to see yer smile, An' jumps upon yer, lovin', when yer call, I'd like yer if yer was alone without a home 'n' friend, A burglar tramp or anything at all! Sometimes a human bein' likes yer surface—polished up—Yer talk or table manners plays their part.

But a dog, when he looks at yer, goes beneath the top veneer, An' a dog—a dog he judges by yer heart! —Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., in The Christian Herald.

More truth than poetry in this little tribute to a dog's intelligence. His processes of reasoning may be difficult to trace, but his judgment is always correct, in estimating character, and the man who enlists a dog's confidence, can be sure of sympathy and heartiness, for he is a man whose heart lies so close to the surface that it is not difficult to reach.

The love of a dog is so genuine, and so free from affectation, that it excites interest and confirms the belief that he possesses a high order of intelligence. He suffers hunger and hardship without complaint and there is no sacrifice too great to the love which holds him steady. He knows the voice and the step of the man who directs him, and renders prompt obedience without question.

If you have ever followed a well trained dog in the field, and noted the care as well as the skill with which he worked, how he caught the direction of the wind as by instinct, and trailed the birds to a standstill, and then, with tail like a ram-rod, pointed the game, and waited patiently for the crack of the gun, you have patted him on the head, when he retrieved the bird, and spoke a word of encouragement before you said, "He on."

Of course there are all kinds of dogs from the mongrel and all-outraged, and yet they are all endowed to greater or less extent with the same spirit of love and loyalty. A cur—short-haired, slim-tailed and homely—strayed into a city home some years ago, where the daughter, who had a passion for pets, took him in and named him "Jack." He was not a lovable dog, and the family paid but little attention to him, but the girl loved him and "Jack" was not long in finding it out.

With his love for the girl, developed a fierce disposition, and in time he became so cross that there was no chance for him, and the family was obliged to put him out of the way, but the girl felt that she had lost a friend, and "Jack's" grave in the woods was a sacred spot to her.

bible, one morning, to conduct family worship. He believed in reading from wherever he opened the book, and so started to read the fifth chapter of Genesis, but soon discovered that many of the names were difficult to pronounce.

When he came to verse twelve he read: "And Cainan lived twenty years and begot Mahalalel." Glancing down the page he closed the book and said, "And so they went on getting to the end of the chapter. Let us pray!"

To old book is a history of people who came into the world from the first family down through the centuries to the dawn of the Christian era. The experiences of life were as checkered and have always been the common lot of humanity, and will continue to be so long as time endures. We owe to ourselves, and to the community of which we are a part, to meet them with as much fortitude as a dog displays.

Some people enjoy posing as martyrs, and find comfort in the belief that the greater the suffering here the greater will be the reward in the life to come, but the dog has no such outlook. He suffers patiently without hope and it is up to us to see that he is made comfortable and happy.

The animal kingdom is a helpless kingdom. It contributes freely to the pleasures and comforts of humanity, and is not half appreciated. Can't we afford to be more thoughtful?

JOURNEYING TO JERUSALEM.

The Bible contains many pathetic scenes calculated to stir the tenderest emotions of the heart. The last journey of Jesus with his disciples is chief of these; but next to this, it will be generally conceded, is Paul's parting with the elders of the Ephesian Church. We have seen Paul among his enemies, here we see him among his friends. We have seen him in martial or forensic attitude, here we see him embraced and embracing in a holy and undying affection. We have heard him thundering against a willfully blind Judaism, or a paganism which thought the Godhead like gold or silver or stone, graven by art and heart's device; but now it is as if his heart's strings were muffled, and we catch only the softest notes of what has been called one of the most touching and perfect addresses ever spoken.

One of that day, observing the scene, would have certainly said: "This great, opulent city, with its quadruple harbor and forests of masts, represents the permanent, little company of obscure and transient strangers exchanging their farewells, presents the evanescence: Exactly the same human judgments are: The city is gone; its harbors are filled up; the very face of nature is changed, the coast-line altered, and all that saves Miletus from oblivion is the fact that there Paul said goodbye to his converts. That primitive beach meeting, observed by the sailors and merchants with contempt or indifference—the lovely and imperishable picture of it shines out of the blessed Book for each succeeding generation, in all lands and languages.

But this scene is not merely pathetic, it is highly significant. It is the golden period to the third and last great missionary journey of the Apostle Paul. I do not wonder the apostle indulged himself in a retrospect at this point. As he gazed at these men rescued from Judaism and heathenism, and consecrated to the Christian ministry by the imposition of his hands, not merely his experience in Ephesus, but the stirring scenes of his twenty years of missionary life, seem to pass before him in a panorama. It is as if he heard once more the voice of the Spirit saying to the Church in Antioch: "Separate me Paul to the work whereunto I have called him."

A look forward is the natural sequence to a retrospect. The apostle wishes to conserve the fruits of his toil. What shall be the fate of his Churches. He sees the antagonism of the heresies, and ravaging wolves. He pours out his soul in an appeal to the elders: "Take heed!" "Watch!" "Remember!" He pleads every motive. Do they love him? Do they recognize the spirit of his ministry, his lowly-mindedness, tenderness, and patience; his diligence to declare the whole counsel of God publicly and from house to house; and his absolute disinterestedness? They will manifest their love by protecting the churches which he has founded. And in this arduous responsibility, following the vocation of the Holy Spirit, and ministering for a Church founded in the Redeemer's blood, God and grace are sources of safety and success. Spite of wolves, heretics, world, flesh, and devil, God is able to build up and to the finally persistent give a portion among the sanctified Israel already arrived in the heavenly Canaan.

Yet they are not to be recipients only. They are to be teachers, keeping in mind the golden sayings of Jesus here snatched from oblivion, and which affirm that the moral gains of the giver exceed the material gains of the recipient.

The Teachers' Lantern. Before ever the Roman chain was riveted on St. Paul's wrist he already had a fetter, invisible indeed but none the less constraining. He was bound in the spirit by an overmastering sense of duty. He who had comforted others in affliction could not himself escape affliction. He was predestined to suffer. Yet he was unmoved, having his eye on duty, not on danger. It is the finish that counts, not the beginning or middle. St. Paul resolutely determined to finish his course. He kept his prize in view. He deliberately conserved all faculties and re- he might reach the goal. Blood-stains on garments are tales. They have brought swift conviction to many. St. Paul proposed to keep his garments clean for the great assize. Here recurs the inveterate antagonism between legal morality and the free gift of grace. The favor of God according to the gospel does for the penitent and believing that which ages of self-righteous observance of ceremonial and moral codes could not do. All Asia Minor was a hot-bed of heresy, but Ephesus was particularly so. Some professional philosophers on adopting Christianity instead of dropping their errors brought them with creating a sect in the church. An idea of this Christian ministry is here irradiated: (a) it is received of the Lord; (b) its chief concern is to testify to God's favor in Christ; (c) it must be disinterested; (d) industrious; (e) watchful; (f) it must deliver a complete message. After all, Paul was greater in himself than anything he could say. It has been affirmed that personality only can educate. In this respect Paul was one of the greatest educators the world has ever seen. His message was himself. John Ruskin thus explains Milton's strange phrase "blind-mouths," when he says the two words express the contraries of the great offices of the Church, bishop and pastor. Bishop is one who sees, pastor is one who feeds. To be blind, therefore, is to be most unbishoply, as it signifies one who wishes to be fed rather than to feed others. Out of Ephesus also came six of the "grievous wolves" who harried the flock by teaching the "perverse things" that led some to their ruin.

WHY NOT?

The things we get for nothing Are seldom worth the price, And most of all, the thing we call, Gratuitous advice.

Weirdo the juggler was practicing in his back yard when Oddson Ends the middle fend, looked over the fence and then swung himself up and sat on the top. "Pardon me," he said brightly, "but there's something I've always wanted to know. It's this: when you are in juggling vein, does it affect your juggling vein?" Weirdo, being busily engaged in keeping eight seven pound weights in the air at one and the same time, made no answer except a snort, and Oddson Ends after a moment or two, resumed, "Well then will you tell me this? Being such a handy man—handy, you see the point?—I say, being such a handy man, could you, if a spigot got out of order, faucet? Force it—see?"

With great deliberation, Weirdo, having missed one of the weights, threw the other seven with unerring aim at Oddson Ends, only the last two failing to hit him.

A Medical Book Free

By Dr. N. A. Goddard

Modern Methods of treating Chronic Diseases Without Operation, has just come from the pen of Dr. Goddard, Specialist and is one of the most interesting as well as instructive little books the doctor has ever written.

If you are a sufferer from Appendicitis, Rupture, Gall Stones, Colic, Gout or Chronic diseases of a private nature, you should avail yourself of his offer to send you this valuable little book free simply for the asking. A postal will bring it to you, in a plain wrapper. Many so-called surgical diseases, have been proven to be curable by medical treatment, more safely and more easily and cheaply by modern medical methods than was believed possible a few years ago.

After you have read this little book, you can consult Dr. Goddard on his monthly visits to Janesville, free of charge and have the satisfaction of knowing that you have secured the expert opinion of a reputable specialist in these matters. If you have been advised to submit to an operation, surely do not fail to consult him before undergoing such an operation. His advice may save you many weeks of suffering, loss of time and expense, possibly your life. Dr. Goddard will be at the Grand Hotel, Janesville, Tuesday, Sept. 5, and he makes no charges for a friendly visit. Hours 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

"That's a Lie!"

blackmail, graft. It's all here, Bob. The report was made by one of our own men, and it's incomplete, but I can have it elaborated. What do you say, Mrs. Wharton? Is it true?"

Lorelei dropped her head. "Most of it, I dare say."

"Did you try to blackmail Merkle?"

"No."

"Your mother and your brother did."

She was silent.

"They tried to scare him into marrying you, did they not?"

"Hammon said something about that," ejaculated Bob, "but I don't believe."

Lorelei checked him. "It's quite true."

"Merkle said you had nothing to do with it personally," conscientiously explained Mr. Wharton, "and I'm willing to take his word. But that's not here nor there." There was a moment of silence during which he folded and replaced the report; then he shook his head, exclaiming, "Second-hand goods, my boy!"

"That's a lie!" Lorelei's voice was like a whip.

Mr. Wharton eyed her grimly.

"That's something for Bob to determine—I have only the indications to go on, and don't blame him for losing his wits—you're very good looking—but the affair must end. You're not a girl I'd care to have in my family—pardon my bluntness."

She met his eyes fairly. At no time had she flinched before him, although inwardly she had cringed and her flesh had quivered at his merciless attack.

"You have told Bob the truth," she began, slowly, "in the worst possible way; you have put me in the most unfavorable light. I dare say I never would have had the courage to tell him myself, although he deserves to know. I've been pretty—commercial, because I had to be, but I never sold myself, and I shouldn't begin now. Bob isn't a child; he's nearly thirty years old—old enough to make up his own mind—and he must make this decision, not I."

Bob opened his lips, but his father forestalled him.

"What do you mean by that?"

"I have no price. If he's sick of the match we'll end it, and it won't cost you a cent."

Bob looked inscrutable; his father smiled for the first time during the interview.

"That's very decent of you," he said, "but of course I shouldn't put the good faith of your offer to the test. I don't want something for nothing. I'll take care of you nicely."

Thus far Bob had yielded precedence to his father, but he could no longer restrain himself. "Now let me take the chair," he commanded, easily. "My mind is made up. You see, I didn't marry Peter Knight, residence Vale, nor James Knight, reputation bad, nor even Mathilda Knight, wife of Peter. I married this kid, and the books are closed. You say the Knights are a bad lot, and Lorelei's reputation is a trifle discolored; maybe you're right, but mine has some ink blots on it, too, and I guess the cleanest part of it would just about match the darkest that hers can show. I seem to have all the best of the deal."

"Don't be an ass," growled his father.

"I've always been one—I may as well be consistent." Bob felt the slender form at his side begin to tremble, and smiled down into the troubled blue eyes upturned to his. "Maybe we'll both have to do some forgiving and forgetting. I believe that's usual nowadays."

"Oh, I'm not whitewashing you," Hammon snapped. "She probably knows what you are."

"I do," agreed Lorelei. "He's a drunkard, and everything that means. But you taught him to drink before he could choose for himself."

Mr. Wharton smiled sneeringly. "Admirable! I begin to see that you're more than a pretty woman. Get his sympathy; it's good business. Now he'll think he must act the man. But that will wear off. And understand this: You can't graft off me. You and your family are due for a great disappointment. Bob hasn't anything, and he won't have until I die, but I'm good for thirty years yet. I'm not going to disinherit him. I'm merely going to wait until you both get tired. Take my word for it, poverty is the most tiresome thing in the world."

"We can manage," said Lorelei.

"You speak for yourself, but he can't make a living—unless he has something in him that I never discovered. I fear you'll find him rather a heavy burden."

Throughout the interview Mr. Wharton had kept his temper quite perfectly, and his coolness at this moment argued a greater fixity of purpose than might have been inferred from a display of rage. He made a final appeal to his son: "Can't you see that it won't do at all, Bob? I won't stand parasites, unless they're my own. Either have done with the matter and let me pay the charges—or go through to the bitter finish on your own feet. She's supporting three loafers: I dare say she can take care of another, but it isn't quite right to put it upon her—she's sure to weary of it some time. You'll notice I've said nothing about your mother so far, but—she's with me in this. I'll be in the city for several days, and I'd like to have you return to Pittsburgh with me when I go. Mother is expecting you. If you decide to stick it out—Wharton's face showed more than a trace of feeling, his deep voice lowered a tone—"you may go to hell, with my compliments, and I'll sit on the lid to keep you there."

He rose, took his hat, and stalked out of the apartment without so much as a backward glance.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"Whew! That was a knockout. But who got licked?" Bob went to the little sideboard and helped himself to a stiff drink.

"Did he mean it?"

"My dear, time wears away mountains, and rivers dry up, and the whole solar system is gradually running down, I believe; but dad isn't governed by any natural laws whatsoever. He's built of reinforced concrete, and time hardens him. He's impervious to rust or decay, and gravity exerts no power over him."

"Then I think you'd better make your choice tonight."

Bob's eyes opened. "I have. Don't you understand? I'm going to stand pat—that is, unless—he hesitated, his smile was a bit uncertain—"unless you're sick of your bargain. I'm afraid you haven't come out of the deal very well. You thought I was rich—and so did I until a moment ago—but I'm not. I've run through a good deal. I don't blame you for considering me a fine catch or for marrying me. You see, I never expected to find a girl who'd take me for anything except my money, so I'm not offended or disappointed or surprised. A bank account looms up just as big on Fifth Avenue as it does on Amsterdam, and there aren't any more love matches over there than elsewhere. I'm not blind to my shortcomings, either; there are a lot of bad habits waiting to be acquired by a chap with time and money like me. I can't live without booze; I don't know how to earn a living; I'm a corking spendthrift. That's one side. Balanced against that, I possess—let me see—I possess a fair sense of humor. Not a very even account, is it?"

For once in his life Bob showed unmistakable self-consciousness; this was, so far as Lorelei knew, his maiden effort to be serious. He ran on hurriedly: "What I mean to convey is this: I have no regrets, no questions to ask, no reproaches. I got all I expected, and all I was entitled to when I married you. But it seems that you've been cheated, and—I'm ready to do the square thing. I'll step aside and give you another chance, if you say so."

During this little declamation Lorelei had watched him keenly; she appeared to be seriously weighing his offer.

"I was getting pretty tired of things," he added, "and I suppose I'd have wound up in the D. T. parlors of some highly exclusive institution or behind a bathroom door with a gas tube in my teeth. But—I met you, and you went to my head. I wanted you worse than I ever wanted anything—worse even than I ever wanted liquor. And now I have you. I've had you for one day, and that's something. I suppose it's silly to talk about starting over—I don't want to reform if I don't have to; moderation strikes me as an awful cold proposition; but it looks as if reform were indicated if I'm to keep you. I'm just an album of expensive habits, and—we're broke. Maybe I could—do something with myself if you took a hand. It's a good deal to ask of a girl like you, but—he regarded her timidly, then averted his eyes—"if you cared to try it we might make it go for a while. And you might get to care for me a little—if I improve." Again he paused hopefully. "I've been as honest as I know how. Now, won't you be the same?"

Lorelei roused herself, and spoke with quiet decision.

"I'll go through to the end, Bob."

Bob started and uttered an inarticulate word or two; in his face was a light of gladness that went to the girl's heart. His name had risen freely to her lips; he felt as if she had laid her hand in his with a declaration of absolute trust.

"You mean that?"

She nodded.

He took her in his arms and kissed her gently; then, feeling her warm against his breast, he burst the bonds that had restrained him up to this moment and covered her face, her neck, her hair with passionate caresses. For the first time since his delirium of the night before he abandoned himself to the hunger her beauty excited, and she offered him no resistance.

At last she freed herself, and, straightening the disorder of her hair, smiled at him mistily.

"Beautiful!" His eyes were aflame.

"You're my wife. Nothing can change that."

"Nothing except—yourself. Now, you must listen to me." She forced him reluctantly into his chair and seated herself opposite. He leaned forward and kissed her once more, then seized her hand and held it. At intervals he crushed his lips into its pink palm.

"We must start honestly," she began. "Do you mind if I hurt you?"

"You can't hurt me so long as you don't—leave me. Your eyes have haunted me every night. I've seen the curve of your neck—your lips. No woman was ever so perfect, so maddening."

"Always that. You're not a husband at this moment; you're only a man."

He frowned slightly.

"That's what makes this whole matter so difficult," she went on. "Don't you see?"

He shook his head.

"You don't love me, you're drunk with—something altogether different to love. . . . It's true," she insisted. "You show it. You don't even know the real me."

"Beauty may be only a skin disease," Bob laughed, "but ugliness goes clear to the bone."

"I married you for your money, and you married me because—I seemed physically perfect—because my face and my body roused fires in you. I think we are both pretty rotten at heart, don't you?"

"No. Anyhow, I don't care to think about it. I never won anything by thinking. Kiss me again."

She ignored his demand, with her shadowy smile. "I deliberately traded on my looks; I put myself up for a price, and you paid that price regardless of everything except your desires. We muddled things dreadfully and got our deserts. I didn't love you, I don't love you now any more than you love me; but I think we're coming to respect each other, and that is a beginning. You have longings to be something different and better; so have I. Let's try together. I have it in me to succeed, but I'm not sure about you."

"Thanks for the good cheer."

"You're afraid you can't make a living for us—I know you can. I'm merely afraid you won't."

"What do you mean?" he asked. "I don't believe the liquor will let you."

"Nonsense. Any man can cut down."

"Cutting down" won't do for us, Bob." He thrilled anew at her int-

his: "There goes eight bells," he said.

The ship's officer was talking to the inquisitive old lady who was making her first sea trip.

"There goes eight bells," he said.

"Excuse me, it is my watch below."

"Mercy on us!" exclaimed the lady. "Does your watch strike as loud as that?"

One day a neighbor remarked on his rapid growth.

"Yes," said George, "that's Ma's fault. She waters me too much."

"There goes eight bells," he said.

Let's Find Our Friends.

It is about time to look the world over and see if we have any friends who can help us preserve free institutions intact on this hemisphere. If we have no friends, let us behave so as to deserve them. Let us acquit ourselves so that nations will see in us a desirable ally, and not a parasite for whom they are to pull chestnuts out of the fire.—Frank B. Vrooman, in the Century Magazine.

Both Prodigals.

A young wife remonstrated with her husband, a dissipated spendthrift, on his conduct. "Love," said he, "I am like the prodigal son; I shall reform by and by." "I will be like the prodigal son, too," she replied, "for I shall arise and go to my father."
